Purpose of This Study

This is a study of genealogical demographics of the inhabitants of Hebron, NH from 1700 to 1900. In particular a study is made of birth patterns, death patterns, ages at marriage, first child and death. Complete genealogies of the families included in this study are available but will not be included in this writing.

Records and Sources

Hebron, NH is fairly unusual in that nearly every vital record from the founding of the town to the present is in tact. Complete records of births from 1768, deaths from 1784 and marriages from 1795 exist, as well as, records of families as they moved to the Hebron area. Marriage, birth and death data are available from 1775 onward. Other important records include copies of cemetery inscriptions, and nearly all fencing, town and selectmen records are extant.

In many cases the records supplement and support each other to form a complete genealogy of the early Hebron families. In some cases a degree of judgment was used when two sources disagreed on particulars. For example, the cemetery inscriptions from the three cemeteries involved are often in disagreement with birth records when it comes to stating an individual's age at death. The cemetery inscriptions routinely overstate an individual's age at death, often by a decade. Often a cemetery inscription will read that so-and-so died in the 89th year, 3rd month and 15th day of their life, and when you calculate what their birth date must have been and compare it to the birth record for that individual, in some 60% of the cases the age given in the inscription were wrong, and nearly always wrong to the high side, i.e. the surviving members of an individual's family thought they were older (or an individual, while still living, reported they were older) than they really were. Evidently, when ordering headstones, survivors did not check the town records for accuracy, or it simply was not considered important during this era. For this study, whenever possible, the dates as listed in the town birth records were used in place of those listed in the cemetery records.

The complete list of records and their abbreviations are given on the next few pages.

Historical Background

Hebron, New Hampshire was formed in 1792 from parts of the earlier townships of Cockermouth and Plymouth. Cockermouth was given a grant in 1766 and a few settlers first came to Cockermouth in 1771. Plymouth was granted in 1763 and settled in 1764. All the early settlers took up land in the broad valleys of the Pemigewasset and Baker river valleys, and few, if any, settled in the more rugged southwesterly extension of the town, which is now the eastern part of Hebron, until the 1780's.

Proprietors or grantees to these towns were essentially promoters who undertook to settle and develop new townships with the expectation that they could sell their lands at a profit as settlement progressed. Initially, each proprietor had an undivided right in the township. Some sold their undivided rights to others, and some sold land after it had been surveyed and divided into ranges and lots. Only a few of the proprietors became actual settlers.

The majority of the active proprietors of both Plymouth and Cockermouth were residents of Hollis, N.H. Of the 64 proprietors named in the 1766 Cockermouth grant, three became settlers - Stephen Ames, James Goold, and Samuel Hazelton. Many of the other settlers, however, were relatives or neighbors of the proprietors.

Among the early settlers in the part of Cockermouth that became Hebron, the following families were from Hollis: Ball, Colburn, Cummings, Farley, Goodhue, Goold, Hardy, Hazelton, Hobart, Kemp, Kendall, Lovejoy, Melven, Nevens, Noyes, Phelps, Powers, and Pratt.

The boundaries of Plymouth and Cockermouth, as originally granted, did not conform to geographical realities. The part of Plymouth which extended in a southwesterly direction to what is now Hebron Common, and about three miles down both sides of Newfound Lake, was distant from the center of Plymouth, making travel to church services and town meetings difficult. Likewise, the valleys where the first settlers of Cockermouth established themselves were in the extreme southeasterly part of that township, within two miles of Newfound Lake. Most of the area of the township was hilly terrain extending for six miles or more to the boundaries of Dorchester on the west, Rumney on the north, and Orange on the south. There were, however, scattered settlers in these hills at an early date, especially in the part later known as North Groton.

Due to these geological constraints and the difficulty that the separated portions of the towns made for daily commerce, it was decided to reform the townships. By joining the southeasterly part of Cockermouth and the southwesterly part of Plymouth, the compact town of Hebron was formed on June 15, 1792. The remnant of Cockermouth was renamed Groton four years later.

According to Elmer M. Hunt in his book New Hampshire Town Names and Whence They Came, the new town was named Hebron at the suggestion of Samuel Phelps, who was born in Hebron, Conn.

Major Family Groups

This study included 3026 individuals who either moved to, were born in or died in Hebron, NH between 1700 and 1900. Within this population I have defined a major surname as one in which there were 10 or more individuals. The major surnames that appear in this population are:

Birth Month Statistics

The birth month patterns of this population could be studied for 1262 individuals. Of this subset with known birth months, 655 were male and 607 were female. The raw data ranked ordered by total births in a given month of the year are:

Month of Year	Males born	Females born	Total
3	64	67	131

Table 1

Birth Month

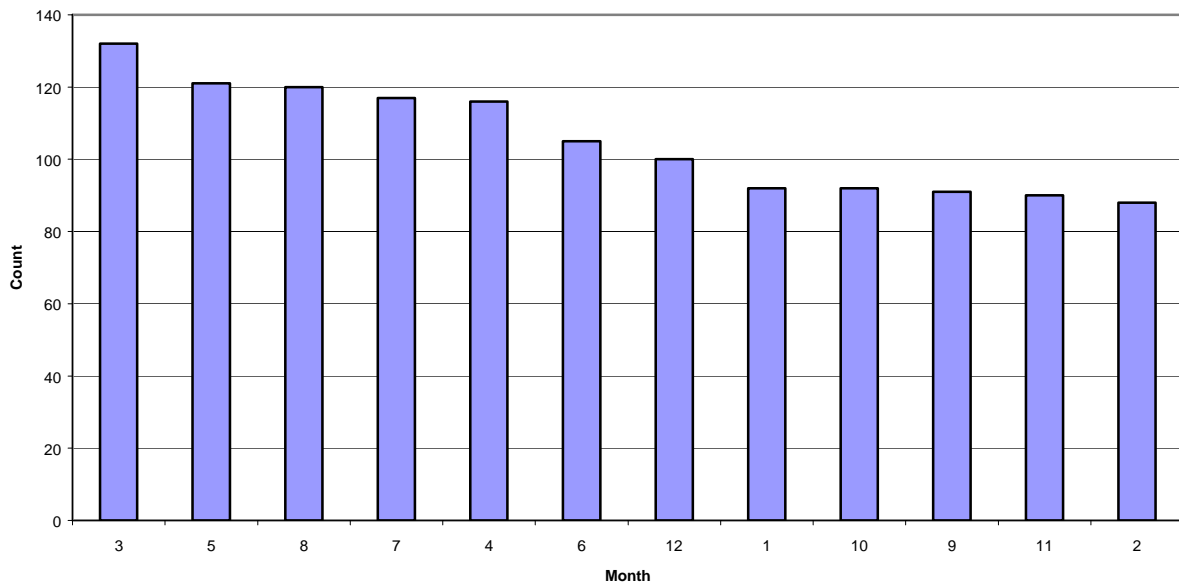

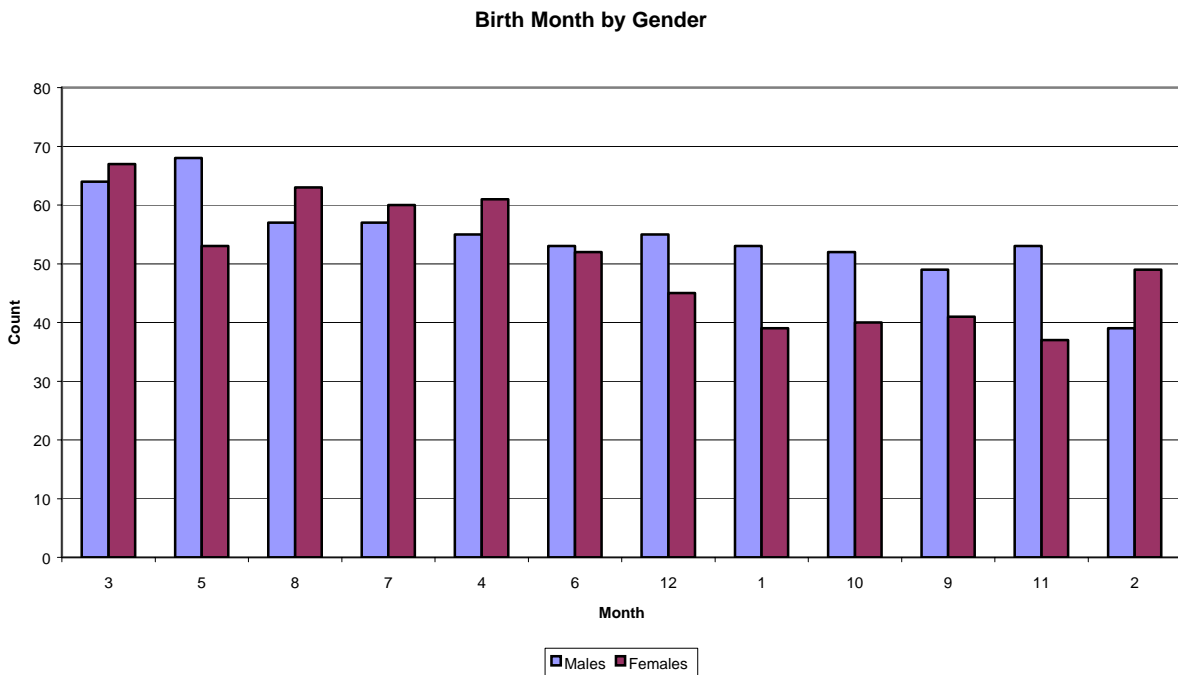

Chart 1 – Total Population

As can be seen, the months March (3) through and including August (8), representing 50% of the year, is the time frame when the majority (56%) of children were born. If we include September, this seven month period would represent 58% of the year and 63% of the births. Prima facie there would appear to be a selection process that resulted in the majority of births occurring in the warmer months. This is misleading, however, more children born during the colder months died in infancy or at birth than children born in the warmer months. Many children who died at or near birth were never named or recorded. When they were recorded it was simply “son (or daughter)– died in infancy” with no associated dates or data. In fact, as will be clear below, deaths in general were higher during the colder months. As for infancy and at birth deaths, the lack of antibiotics, lower nutritional levels, and the greater susceptibility to colds, flu and pneumonia during the colder months probably explains the data.

The data can also be looked at by gender:

Chart 2

This gender data tells a different story. Male births are more evenly spread throughout the year, whereas, female births are significantly tipped to the warmer parts of the year. Where 54% of males were born in the six warm months, nearly 59% of females were born in the same period. This difference of nearly 5% is significant and its explanation is not obvious. Even if the previous explanation involving unrecorded infant deaths in cold weather is accurate, why should girl babies be more susceptible to these seasonal diseases than boy babies? Could there be a cultural explanation? One interpretation of the data would be that more girls who died at birth or soon after went unrecorded than boys. There is a well known statistic in agrarian communities from anthropological studies that demonstrates that girl babies were considered less valuable, less wanted than boy babies, and girl infanticide (usually by exposure) was significantly higher as well. The interpretation of the data offered would indicate that less care was taken about recording female births and deaths than was taken with males in the early Hebron agrarian community.

Males - Age of 1st Marriage

Chart 3a

Females - Age at 1st Marriage

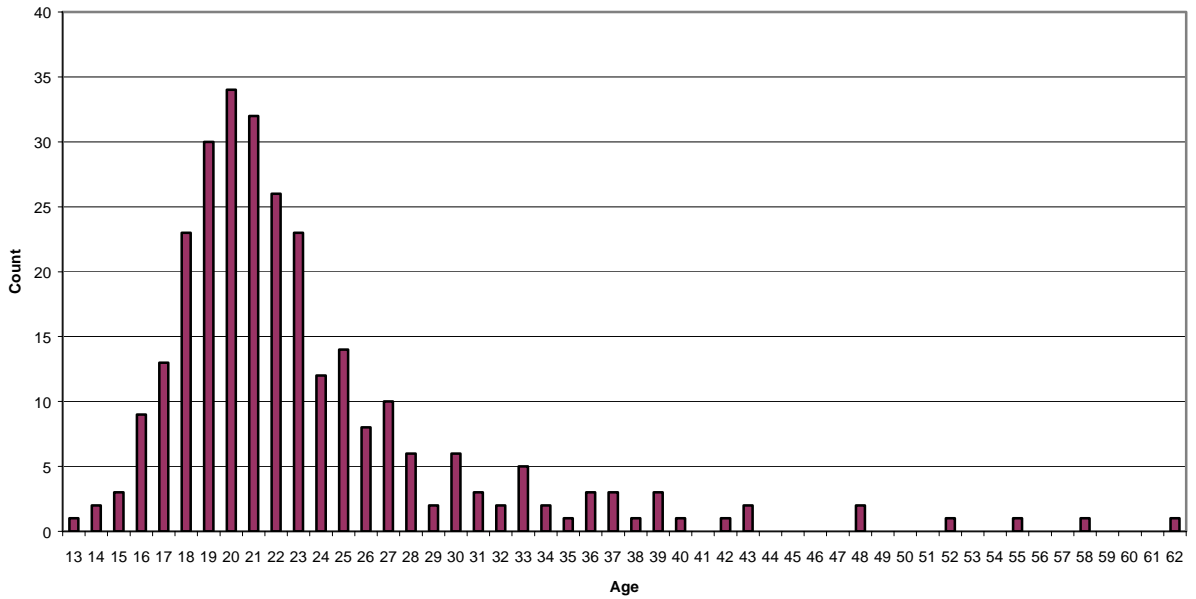

Chart 3b

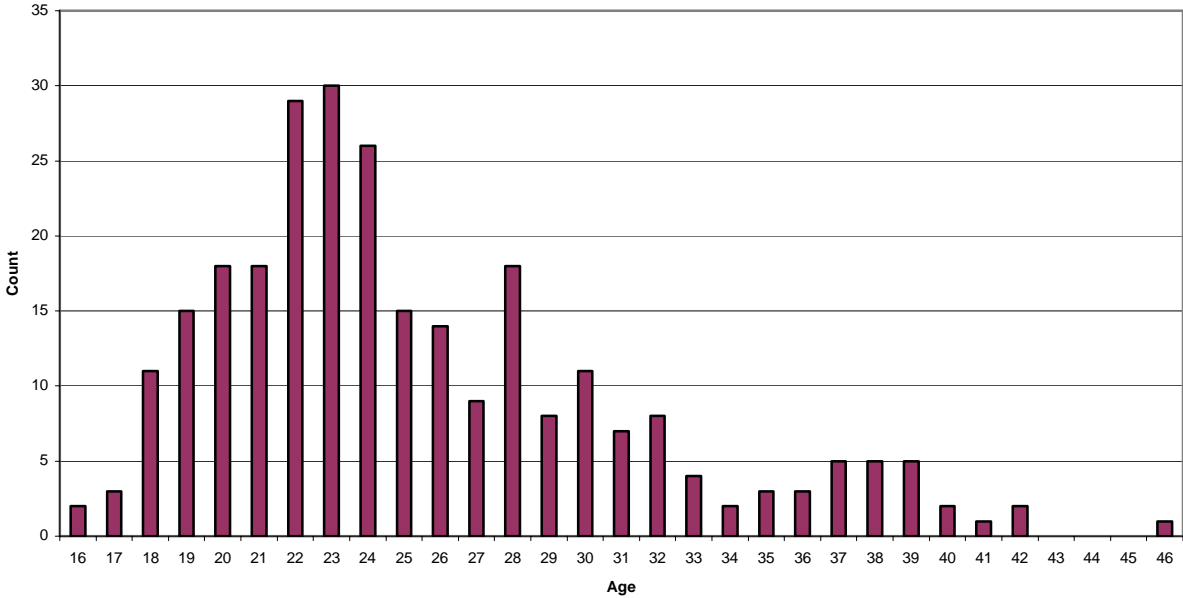

Males, on average, married some 2 and a half years later in life than females. The mean age of 23.3 and 25.9 for females and males respectively is fairly late in life compared to other sections of the United States for the same time period. This is consistent with other New England towns where a strong Puritan influence usually led to marriages occurring later than in non-Puritan or Catholic influenced areas of the country.

Child Birth Statistics

Age at Birth First Child - Females

Chart 4

While it is not unusual to find in Chart 4 that most women were having their first child in their early twenties, given the mean age of marriage at 23.3 years, it is unusual to see so many women having children well into their late forties, as is evident in Chart 5 on the next page. The lack of, or the non-practice of, birth control methods can explain part of this late birthing, but it can be concluded that, in general, women were very healthy and fit to (a) have children that late, and (b) not have a high “died in child birth” statistic to go with it. As will be seen in the following section on Death Statistics, there was no unusual “died in child birth” statistic for forty year old women. So, it is concluded that women in Hebron during this period were physically very fit and healthy.

Age at Birth of Last Child - Females

Chart 5

Table 5 – Age of Childbearing - Males

	1st Child	Last Child
Count	304	304
Mean	29.461	33.780
Oldest	54	58

The child begetting pattern for men has the one surprise. Even though the mean age for men to beget their first child, 29.461 years, is some 4 years later than for women, 25.495 years, the mean age for men to beget their last child at 33.78 years is only slightly more than 1 year later than women's 32.61 years. What makes this surprising is that many of these men remarried after losing a wife, sometimes two or more times, and usually married women young enough to have children. Further, men's ability to beget children late into life, well beyond the menopause age of women, resulted in some men begetting children into their late 50's. (See Chart 6 and 7). Therefore, it would be expected that the mean age for men to beget their last child would be considerably later than for women. The explanation for this discrepancy seems to be in the fact that men did not, as a rule, remarry women considerably younger than themselves. In fact, when you review marriages, couple by couple, you will see that many, if not most, men who remarried after being widowed, married women their own age or slightly older than themselves. This was probably due to economic reasons as much as anything, as (1) older widows, often had substantial holdings in land and other assets, and (2) marrying younger women would have a higher probability of resulting in more children, which some men may not have wanted. Extra children from a second or third marriage made estate settlements difficult. Or (3) women their own age or older were all that was available as the younger women were, as we saw, married by 24.

Death Statistics

The first question, as with births, was is there a pattern in the months in which deaths occurred. There were Month of Death data for 992 individuals in this study. Not surprisingly, given the cold winters of New Hampshire, there were more deaths during the colder months. See Chart 8 below.

The single surprise in this data is the high death rate in May (5) and June (6). When we look at the data sorted by gender the data shows a slightly different underlying pattern. See Chart 9. In Chart 9 May is a particularly bad month for men, and June has a higher than mean death rate for men and women. Why is this? A possibility is that May and June are the two months when major farming activities occur in the preparation of fields, fences and wood lots for the coming season. Could it be that farm related accidents explain the higher than mean (mean = 82.67 deaths per month) for these two months?

The colder months stretching from October (10) through March (3) were the hardest months to survive for a number of reasons: (1) poorer nutrition, (2) the lack of antibiotics for diseases such as pneumonia, (3) the continuing need to be in cold, damp work locations to supply firewood and tend livestock, and (4) the general higher level of toxins present when forced to stay indoors in wood heated houses. It was often during these months when Diphtheria, Typhoid and Flu epidemics struck. As examples, during the Typhoid epidemic of 1815, the Greenleaf family lost five children between November 13 and December 13, and again during the Diphtheria epidemic of 1863-1864 between October 4, 1863 and February 3, 1864, the Griffin family lost four members.

Genealogical Demographics by Family

A study was made of vital statistics for families with statistically significant populations. Statistically significant was defined as families with 9 or more members. Two families met this criteria but were removed from the statistics: The Greenleaf and Griffin families were removed because of the large loss of family members during the various epidemics severely skewed the resulting statistics for those families. The Wheeler family was excluded because of the fifteen members studied complete data was not available for ten of them. The families used in this part of the study are:

The age of first marriage distribution is typical of New England towns with the exception of the Morse and Bartlett families that have an average age greater than 30 years old which is fairly late, even by New England standards.

From Chart 7 below we see that the average age at the time of the birth of a first child, 28.4 follows some 4 years after the average age at marriage of 24.5. This implies that couples were not generally being pushed into marriage because of prenuptial pregnancies. In fact, 4 years is such a long time between marriage and first born child that it can be concluded that couples generally worked to establish their home and income before children were conceived. This in turn begs the question how did they prevent pregnancy? Surely, they did not all practice abstinence for 4 years. There were several methods available to these early settlers to control pregnancy. Honey for example made a fairly effective spermicide. The book to read is Sex in History by Reay Tannahill. But the real reason pregnancy came so long after marriage was probably the hard work and subsistence diets of young married couples. The reason lactating women have very low pregnancy rates is because a woman has to have above a minimum amount of body fat to become pregnant. In the case of our early settlers, young women working, side-by-side, with their husbands, clearing fields, building a house and establishing a life together, probably did not have excess body fat, and perhaps, insufficient body fat to allow for pregnancy. Of the 212 women in the database where marriage and age at first child data is known, only 4 were evidently pregnant at the time of their marriage, and another 36 had children within a year of their marriage.

The second point to be made from Chart 7 is the unusually high (19%) of people who had their first child after the age of 30, with the Colburn family being as late as 36 years of age. This seems to fly in the face of the popular belief that farming communities had children early and often. Not so in this study group.

Average age at death in Chart 9 shows the widest spread of data. Why, for example, did the Bartletts live on average some 35 years longer than the Barnards. All of these families were farm families, all lived in approximately the same economic strata, all ate nearly the same foods and all drank the same water. At first glance one might think that statistics is playing a role as a result of the difference in family sizes. But that critique is refuted by the distribution within the data base of smaller and larger families. The large families of Norris, Pike, Hobart, Ball Ordway, Hazelton and Crosby (all over 25 individuals) fall in all quadrants of the data base sorted by average age, as do the smaller families. One might conclude that genetics is playing a role. Twin studies have shown, fairly conclusively, that 60-70% of who and what we are is genetic and the remainder environmental. Could it be that 60-70% of the distribution in this data is genetic? Another, and perhaps the underlying driver in this data is childhood death distribution. For example, the family with the lowest average lifetime is the Barnards at 34.8 years. When you look at this family in detail you see that five of the eleven members of this family died before their second birthday. Three lived over 74 years and two over 86 years. The point is, that small sample sizes, and the effects of the various epidemics that effected mainly the young, play havoc with this data and, beyond trends, specific conclusions about particular families should not be drawn.

That said, there are some families that seem to defy the odds. The Bartletts have 9 members, 50% of the sample population, living past 80 years with 3 living into their nineties. This would certainly be a candidate for genetics as an explanation. Likewise with the 7 members of the Jewell family that lived past 80, and with one member making 90. The Bartletts and Jewells would be considered long-lived even by today's standards.

The Pike (70), Ordway (35), Hazelton (64) and Hobart (41) families have the largest membership in this study, in aggregate some 30.9% of the entire database. The fact that their average ages at death are respectively 51.1, 50.6, 50.1 and 49 leads to the conclusion that the average life expectancy during the 18th and 19th centuries in Hebron was approximately 50 years. Using the entire database, including these families, the mean age at death was 53.6 years

Genealogical Demographics by Family by Gender

In this section of the study all families were sorted by gender. Within each gender data base, all families with less than 5 members of that gender were excluded. The Barnard family data was excluded due to the death in childhood reasons stated in the prior section. This resulted in Chart 10 below, in which you will see blanks for those gender-families that were removed from the statistics. This resulted in the females data base reducing from 256 individuals to 212, and for males from 412 to 400 individuals. Sorting the data this way, and excluding gender groups below 5 resulted in slightly different overall statistics from the all inclusive statistics given in the section immediately prior.

First, the marriage age delta from age at first child is down to 3 years from 4. However, this 3 years still needs explaining and the explanation given above still holds true here as well.

Age at death by gender gives the surprising result that, on average, men lived longer than women in these families. Death in childbirth explains part of this but it doesn't explain why the oldest male average 74.7 years is 6.8 years longer than the female 67.2. One would expect that once past child bearing years, women would turn in the longest life expectancies, and this is what we saw earlier in this study when we did statistics by individual. The fact that the numbers in this section are averages of sub-populations is the reason for these results. These statistics, done on family averages, filters out the effects of individual people. That said, the mean and median statistics are not effected by this filtering process, and therefore, it is legitimate to conclude that male average age at death of 55.2 years, versus females 51.3 years, is statistically significant.
